So the 'me' exists on a brainscan, as an image, so to speak..

Does that image of the 'me' on a brainscan have consciousness?

No, Just like a photograph of a mountain isn't the mountain. How many more idiotic questions will you ask me?

It's a concept known for sure. But have you ever actually seen your own brain?

Why are these questions idiotic, aren't we just having a philosophical discussion about the exact location of the 'me'

If this 'me' doesn't have consciousness, then how do you know the 'me' is on a brainscan?

No, you're not capable of having a discussion, so of course we're not having a discussion.

Hey, that's just a cop out. .Just because you do not understand how to engage in a meta conversation.
Ok, bye loser. Don't ever respond to me again.

You're a solipsist (aside from also being insane in a different way), solipsists are incapable of engaging in conversations.

Oh you're back, knew it, can't resist a good old chin wag can you.

Just for the record, it's not a someone who is a solipsist. But I guess you will struggle even with that meta conversation too. Never mind.

It's a fact beyond reasonable doubt that it's a someone who is a solipsist: you. But as I said, you're also insane in a different way.

Yes, the you that has never been born is an insane idea, at least we can both agree on that score, maybe in a different way, same difference though.

Well the solipsist you was born. Maybe if she hadn't hit her head when she was little, things could have worked out more favourably.

No, Just like a photograph of a mountain isn't the mountain. How many more idiotic questions will you ask me?

A mountain is known, never seen.

A 'me' is known, never seen, comprehend?

Unless you can run through mountains, you can go away now.

Is this what you call philosophical conversation. Poor you. You're just really bad at communication on a meta level, bye.

Of course you cannot run through a mountain. That's not the point being discussed now is it, try not to deflect.
